CAFOD St Helen's pray-fast-give
I wrote last time about drought in the tropics. That in northern Kenya has persisted for 4 years. Whilst most of the people's diet depends upon the food which is grown locally in normal times, small numbers of animals are kept for dairy and a little meat. The animals are the first to go, grazing being unobtainable.
Food Aid is essential and, now, more scarce. That large portion provided in the past through US Aid is no longer available. There is an increasing emphasis on providing resilience before the situation becomes critical. CAFOD will continue to work through local partners in order to achieve that but it will be mindful of the need to reserve donations against emergency future demands.
Increasingly the work falls to the women in communities. Able young men leave to seek paid work. It is no coincidence that there is a preponderance of young men seeking to cross to Europe from Africa to do so.
